SHINY SHOPPING CARTS, "borrowed" from food markets by customers, are said to end up all too frequently like these. While those shown here were found and salvaged, more than 1,000 are estimated to be permanently lost each week in four Southern California counties. Blamed by the markets' special agents are customers who wheel purchases home and abandon the carts on streets or driveways.

NORTHROP'S SCIENTIFIC "HUB" . . . Center of advanced aeronautical development activity at the Northrop Division of Northrop Aircraft, Inc., is this 380,000 square foot engineering and science center recently completed. One of the nation's most modern "industrial campuses," these buildings provide Northrop with a compact, "human engineered" focal point of activity for work on guided missile, manned aircraft and related programs. The three buildings in the complex include a modern cafeteria, left, capable of feeding 800 persons every 30 minutes; a six-story administrative tower, housing specialized departments and executive offices; and a two-story building with a new computing center on the ground floor and a spacious "shadow-free" drafting room on the second story. All buildings are air-conditioned and color designed to provide an optimum environment for men and women working on the aircraft and missiles of tomorrow.

Gen. Gavin to Be Interviewed

Lieut. Gen. James M. Gavin, first television appearance of 50-year-old chief of army research and development, who has requested retirement, because he says the Pentagon is blocking his military career, will be the guest on CBS television's "Face the Nation," Sunday, February 2, at 1 p.m. The interview will mark the programs.

Asthma is a broad term meaning any condition in which wheezing occurs but bronchial asthma is almost certainly an allergic condition.

In bronchial asthma the symptoms are wheezing, shortness of breath and cough. As in any form of allergy, the sufferer has usually inhaled or eaten certain substances which are harmless to the majority of persons, but which produce great distress in those individuals sensitive or allergic to them.

In many persons, it is difficult to lie down during an attack; they resort to all procedures, such as sitting up all night long in a chair or leaning forward on a table to help them breathe more easily.

The wheezing associated with bronchial asthma varies with different patients. Sometimes the wheez is very quiet and can be heard only with a stethoscope. Sometimes it is so loud that the sound can be heard clear across the room and even in the next room.

The wheezing occurs when the victim attempts to get the air out of the lungs. In a person with a chronic bronchial asthma, an X-ray film of the chest will show that the diaphragm is pushed down from its normal position and the ribs will have a straight character instead of the normal curved formation. This change develops because the sufferer is using all the muscles he has to push out the air which has become trapped in the breathing apparatus of the chest. Very often this action produces another condition which is called emphysema.

HEREDITY FACTOR

Bronchial asthma is also characterized by the history of other allergic conditions, either in the patient or the patient's family, indicating heredity to be a factor in at least 60 per cent of the cases. That is why children of allergic parents should be watched very carefully from the day of birth. Each new food should be given one at a time to learn whether the baby tolerates it.

A skin test is the usual method of establishing the culprit causing bronchial asthma. The skin is scratched with fine lines, ordinarily a number of rows are made. The site may be either the forearm or the back, while in children it may be either the chest or the abdomen. Only the outer layer of the skin is scratched and no blood is drawn. Materials, both in liquid and solid form, are then applied to the scratches. If positive, a sort of hive formation will result. Then, if necessary, an injection procedure may be used to obtain more information.

Persons inclined to wheeze, be short of breath and cough should be suspicious of asthma. If diagnosis has been definitely established, they should avoid anything that causes an attack,
